Guernsey records 2010 hours of sunshine in 2022

The Channel Island of Guernsey recorded 2,117 hours of sunshine throughout 2022. The islands of Guernsey, in the English Channel near the French coast, also take in Alderney, Sark and Herm. It's known for beach resorts like Cobo Bay and the scenery of its coastal cliffs. There is 50 kilometres of coastline along with 40 beaches and bays. Castle Cornet, a 13th-century harbour fortification in the capital of St. Peter Port, now contains history and military museums.

One last thought : The Island of Herm, UK

The Channel Island of Herm, within the islands of Guernsey, remains largely unspoiled from the pollution of the modern world. Its landscape and wildlife make the island a spot of natural beauty and, in 2021, Herm and its ferry service took a large step toward carbon neutrality.

It circulates fuel for hydroelectric power, powered by local supplies. Herm's Channel Islands, although Herm is already carbon neutral, the next steps on its carbon neutral journey include major island water plant installation. It will also convert all island tourism to 100% renewable heating oil.

Gentle, car-free Herm, one of the Islands of Guernsey, is taking more steps to achieve carbon neutrality. Its ferry service from Guernsey now uses hydrotreated vegetable oil, made by Jersey supplier Rubis Channel Islands, and next up is the conversion of all boilers on the 0.77-square-mile island to 100 per cent renewable heating oil.

Herm is 20 minutes by sea from St Peter Port and has long stretches of white sand, cliff paths with views to the French coast and its own microclimate. visitguernsey.com

By the (Chinese) nature of the species, these fish are more abundant in England than elsewhere, and the Atlantic fish, being less numerous, are more scarce. These species are independent of both climates, and we will guarantee that they live when introduced to the British coast. Geographically, they are absent in France, the English coast, and the French coast, according to the nature of the species. ## Brilliant British breaks for 2023

Enjoy seclusion on Guernsey

Staying on doesn't have to mean staying on the mainland. Britain is a host of intriguing islands to explore, and Guernsey is one of its most interesting. The history is the most intriguing aspect of this Isle, which is part of the Channel Islands reachable by ferry or plane. For foodies, seafood is the main draw, while families will love days out on the beach. Delve into the island's history at the German Occupation Museum, and stroll around St Peter Port to browse its independent boutiques. Ogil Government House Hotel & Spa is a brilliant base from which to explore the island.

How to spend a weekend in Guernsey

Slow down on tiny Alderney

For something even more secluded in the Channel Islands, Alderney is a gorgeous escape. Braye Beach Hotel overlooks a gorgeous stretch of white sand, and from here you can explore the entire island on foot. Seek out more stunning coves and swimming spots, or take an island minibus tour to visit highlights like Port Tourgis, one of 18 on the island. Spot unique species as you stroll across its landscapes, such as the biondo hedgehog, and look out for puffins and gannets on nearby Jurbie.

Channel Islands' golden treasure

safe. The speed limit is 35mph and everyone adheres to it. Kids play outside and there's no crime. I think the longest traffic jam I've been in was 10 minutes and that was because I was stuck behind a horse rider."

The island also has a heritage railway. The Alderney Railway is 150 years old, its first passengers Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. Diesel locomotives pulling two former London Underground carriages run from the harbour up the scenic north coast and back again.

But it's bird-spotting rather than train-spotting that people who are most intrigued by Alderney. With more than 300 British and European species recorded on the island, as well as unparalleled views of seabird colonies, this is one of the best places to bird-watch in the British Isles.

Germany," explains Gausvain.

"Many of the Nazi military zones and inland sites are still visible, including the newly reopened Odeon, which offers visitors a glimpse of the past. There have been like during that period — as well as amazing views across the water to France," he adds.

Among the best historic sites is the neolithic burial chamber, Roc à l'Épine near Fort Fourès that dates as far back as 10,000BC, as well as a 4th-century Roman site.

After a long day exploring, I wander down the high street in St. Anne, which is refreshingly lacking a single restaurant chain or a luminous supermarket sign. Instead, there are farm shops with milk bottle refill stations, pubs that could have jumped straight out of a Dickens novel, old-fashioned sweet shops and a tiny cinema. I can't help but think back to Farguhar-Beck's first visit with me. Time does run a little slower in Alderney.

Guernsey Launches Brand New Food Festival – Taste Guernsey

The perfect day out for foodie fanatics, the inaugural Taste Guernsey Food Festival celebrates the best of Guernsey's culinary talent

Renoir in Guernsey, 1883

<https://kylinaiker.de/renoir-in-quernsey-1883>

Dank der Zusammenarbeit mit den Museen von Guernsey und dem Musée des Impressionismes Giverny werden von September bis Dezember 2023 erstmalig Kunstwerke von Renoir an ihrem Entstehungsort zu sehen sein, die er während seines Aufenthaltes auf Guernsey im September 1883 schuf.

Kurator dieses Projektes ist David Ummels, Gründer von Art for Guernsey, der gemeinsam mit einigen großzügigen Museen, Wohltätern und privaten Sammlern diese Ausstellung ermöglicht hat.

Im September 1883 reiste Renoir nach Guernsey, blieb dort etwas mehr als einen Monat und schuf währenddessen 15 Landschaftsbilder. Er war fasziniert von der Art und Weise, wie das Licht mit der Natur, dem kristallklaren Wasser, der steilen Topografie und den Inselbewohnern, die nackt zwischen den Felsen badeten, interagierte. Dies inspirierte ihn so sehr, dass er seinen bisherigen Stil änderte.

Bereits 2019 entstand die Idee zu dieser einzigartigen Ausstellung, als Art for Guernsey den Wanderweg „Renoir Walk“ eröffnete. Diese Tour führt an Originalschauplätzen

Exhibition Brings Renoir Back to Guernsey

by David Roberts

As the Guernsey Arts Council has announced a new art exhibition on Guernsey, in celebration of the 140th anniversary of Pierre-Auguste Renoir's important role in the second Impressionist movement.

In partnership with the Guernsey Museum and the Guernsey Arts Council, the Guernsey Arts Council has brought together a collection of Renoir's truly painted during his stay in Guernsey in 1902 and for the first time ever will show them in the Guernsey Arts Council.

The project has been created by the Guernsey Arts Council, David Roberts, who is responsible for a series of previous exhibitions, installations and private collections, has made the exhibition possible.

PROVENANCE

When 1902 Renoir came to the island, staying for two weeks, he painted 12 landscape paintings, the majority of which were painted in the light of the day and the weather. The artist also wrote and many photographs and the last was a sketch of the island, showing the view from the island.

Renoir in Guernsey, 1883

Art for Guernsey has announced a one-off Renoir exhibition in celebration of the 140th anniversary of Pierre-Auguste Renoir's stay on the second largest of the Channel Islands. In partnership with the Guernsey Museums and the Musée des Impressionnistes Français, Art for Guernsey has brought together a selection of Renoir's works painted during his stay in September 1883 and for the first time ever will show them in the locations they depict. The event will be held from 30 September to 13 December.

Other attractions in Guernsey include the Renoir Walk, which launched in 2016. This new permanent feature is a self-guided, attract-a-visitor training the visitor that Renoir painted in one of Guernsey's most captivating spots: Moulin Point.

The Old Government House Hotel & Spa is the place to stay when visiting the beautiful Channel Island of Guernsey. The only five-star property on the island, it is set in a prime hilltop location in Guernsey's capital, Saint Peter Port, offering stunning panoramic views across the harbour and the neighbouring islands of Sark and Herm. Just a five-minute walk from the picturesque quayside and a stone's throw from the high street, the OGH (as it's affectionately called by locals) is the ideal residence for exploring this idyllic corner of the British Isles, says Hannah Giacardi.

The Old Government House Hotel & Spa, Guernsey

STAY

Walking up the red carpeted steps and into the grand, high-ceilinged reception room of the OGH, I am instantly transported back in time. Built in the 1730s, the OGH was once the official Governor's residence, before starting a new life as a hotel in 1956. The yellow-wear chairs coupled with impeccable hospitality feels like stepping onto the set of Hotel Portofino. With a toddler under one arm and an oversized suitcase in the other, I stand in the marbled reception staring up at the beautiful cornicing and towering chandeliers. My gaze is soon interrupted by the hotel manager, Gervid, who greets us with such warmth it's as though I'm visiting the grand home of a dear friend.

Guernsey to receive over 147,000 cruise passengers in 2023

Guernsey, one of the Channel Islands, is set to receive a total of 147,000 passengers and 86 cruise ships this year, including 12 new vessels making their inaugural visits to the island.

Guernsey's cruise season began on 15 April with the arrival of Parktown's Braemarline Heritage and will end on 30 October with a call from MSC Cruises' MSC Cordia.

Ships due to make maiden visits to the island include Ambassador Cruise Line's Amazon, MSC Europa, National Geographic's NG Ronneby, Oceania Cruises' Riviera, Princess La Serenade, La Chantier, Princess Cruise's Regal Princess, Regent Seven Seas Cruise's Seven Seas Explorer and Silversea Cruises' Silver Endeavour, Silver Dawn, Silver Shadow, Silver Spirit and Silver Shadow.

Some of the more unusual highlights for guests visiting the port include visiting the German Underground Hospital, which was used by German troops during the Battle of Guernsey, and the island's unique 'Secret Garden' which is a hidden gem for those looking for a peaceful escape.

25 perfect long weekends, from city breaks to achievable adventures

With the rise of the four-day week, leisure time is growing – so break out your footprints beyond the city break

By Paul Hoadley
12 April 2023

Guernsey's coastline is a beautiful sight. The view is worth the journey.

Guernsey is the new Friday, or so they say – the evening when bars and restaurants trade when doors are closed, when shops close and most people go home.

By the same token, Tuesday is the new Monday. Either way, it's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it. It's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it. It's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it.

As the island's history and the ability to make the most of it. It's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it. It's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it.

Now, with the island's history and the ability to make the most of it. It's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it. It's a study of the island's history and the ability to make the most of it.

A WALK FOR EVERY DAY IN MAY

The wildflowers are out and the weather is warming up – now is the time to get your walking boots out, says Sarah Baxter

1 STAFFORDSHIRE

Happy Staffordshire Day! The county rejoices on May 1, the date Josiah Wedgwood founded his pottery company in 1759. An apt way to mark the occasion is by joining Staffordshire's Three Peaks Challenge, a 4-mile trek around the county's highest summits. To coincide with the celebrations, treat yourself to a lane hut or treehouse at the Tarn, Staffordshire's large hotel of the year – as well as having enormous grounds it's right next to RSPB Conall Woods, which is perfect for wildlife-filled spring strolls.

2 LONDON

From the 14th century until the crowning of Charles II at the beginning of the 17th century, the tradition was to form a coronation procession from the Tower of London to Westminster Abbey. As King Charles III's coronation looms, re-enact the historic route. The British Pilgrimage Trust has mapped a five-mile walk through the capital along this old royal route, via holy wells, tombs, churches and Roman temples. Download it or join the trust's expert Guy Hayward for a guided, surprise-filled urban pilgrimage in coronation week (May 2, £70pp). For a funky hotel that is nominally on-theme try the Pilgrim in Paddington. Details Room-only doubles from £159 (thepilgrim.com); see britishpilgrimage.org reserve a drift on the Firth of Forth – is marvellous this month; it hosts the largest puffin colony on the east coast from April to mid-July, plus grey seals, razorbills, shags and other seabirds. Ferries run from Dunbar and North Berwick, and from Anstruther in Fife. On the island follow the cliff-top paths (about two miles) to the sea.

25 GUERNSEY

Guernsey is one of the country's sunniest spots, and the lengthening May days provide the perfect backdrop for its wonderful walking festival. Guided strolls of varying lengths provide insight into the bailiwick, from its Second World War history to its farming and folklore. The top pick is the two-mile Walking in the Footsteps of Renoir and Victor Hugo route, visiting Moulin Huet Bay and the cottage where Renoir painted, which is usually off limits (May 21; £15). Embrace the warming weather at Camp de Reves, where posh tents have sea views and four-poster beds. Details One night's self-catering for six from £175 (guernseyglamping.com); festival May 20-June 4 (visitguernsey.com)

Best hotels in the Channel Islands 2023: Where to stay in Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney and Sark

The Channel Islands are the most beautiful part of the British Isles and get more hours of sunshine than any other area, which is a tempting prospect when it comes to relaxing above water in the UK.

If you head to Guernsey, you can easily combine the white sands of Sark and Alderney, as both are just a few hours drive away. Meanwhile, Alderney and Jersey are better explored as night destinations as they are a little further from the other islands in the south and Jersey in the north.

If you're not a beach person, you'll find that the islands offer a range of other activities, from hiking to golfing, and a variety of other attractions. Whether you want a quiet weekend break or a more active holiday, the Channel Islands have something for everyone.

Hay-on-Wye and beyond: 5 of the UK & Ireland's best spring literary festivals

Literary festivals are all over the UK and Ireland this month, in locations just as appealing as the books they showcase.

By Sarah Bassett

THE INDEPENDENT APRIL 23, 2023 4:54 PM GMT

1. Hay Festival

Set on the beautiful Wales-England border, this year's festival includes travel writer Kaye Kanichs delivering the 2023 Jay Martin Lecture, Roy Marsden discussing the British woodland, and Rose Glynn and Rianagh Fennell celebrating a love of wild spaces. Author-led tours with Hayfest House explore the Brecon Beacons, while the Little Red Boat Festival brings Christmas's biggest book festival to Wales, 23 May to 2 June.

2. Guernsey Literary Festival

Celebrating bold writing and big ideas, this event includes highlights such as a talk by Steve Dietz (from Channel 4's Goodwin) centred on her book An Emotional Dictionary – Real Words For How We Feel, and family-focused drawing classes from children's illustrator Rob Biddolph. The festival also offers poetry competitions, writing workshops and the chance to stretch your legs on Guernsey's coastal trails and nature walks. 2 to 14 May.

3. Stratford Literary Festival

Cherish Maggie O'Farrell, Professor Brian Cox, comedian Al Murray and poet Pam Ayres – just some of the big names set to converge on the Day's Inn festival to discuss their work. And for visitors, there are plenty of opportunities to get involved, too, including a crime-writing workshop led by Ian Rankin and Elin Griffiths, and writers' workshops welcoming in the chance to pitch to a literary agent. 2 to 7 May.

4. International Literature Festival Dublin

The Georgian streets that once once-belle grand for James Joyce, W B Yeats and Oscar Wilde welcome Ireland's leading literary festival this May. The 10-day event celebrates the best Irish and international writers, poets, dramatists, playwrights and screenwriters. Book-themed guided walks are also offered. 29 to 28 May.

5. The Bath Festival

This year, Bath's annual celebration of music and books has the theme 'Opening Up'. Accordingly, more than 150 talks, workshops and

Step into Spring on the Islands of Guernsey

Filed to the brim with blossoming wild fauna, unique wildlife and numerous festivals and events, springtime is one of the most idyllic times to visit the Islands of Guernsey.

From rock pooling and pollen watching at Alderney Beach, to 10-hour guided walks at Sark Wildlife Festival, to a sampling of blooming outdoors, the Islands of Guernsey truly shine during the spring.

SILENCE IN SARK

THE smallest of the Channel Islands – a weezy three miles by a mile and a half – Sark is a place for walkers, cyclists and horse-drawn carriage tours (the island's family-run horse and carriage attraction dates back to the late 1700s).

Thanks to clear skies free from light pollution, Sark is ideal for stargazing, either from the island's observatory, where visitors study constellations and track the Milky Way, or at ground level, where all you have to do is look up.

Getting there: The Isle of Sark Shipping Company (sarkshipping.co.uk) runs a 55-minute ferry from Guernsey. Gatwick-Guernsey return flights from £150 (airguerny.com).

Where to stay: La Sablonnerie Hotel, a former 16th Century farmhouse, is a two-minute walk from the popular sea swimming area, Adonis Pool, and has doubles from £98 per night (sablannerie-hotel.co.uk).

If traffic drives you mad and you long for seclusion, head for a glorious island where vehicles are banned

Carefree and car-free

Swap pricey European breaks for beaches a little closer to home, says SARAH MARSHALL

(handstravel.com, 01306 264 006).

IT may not measure up to the Amalfi Coast or the French Riviera when it comes to water temperature and hours of sunshine, but the coastlines around the UK, Ireland and the Channel Islands can be just as captivating. Here are some of the top sandy spots for lazing, bathing and strolling.

Saye Beach, Alderney

Best for: Nature lovers

Why: One of the lesser-known Channel islands, Alderney is still far enough from the beaten track to have crowd-free stretches of sand. A gleaming white horseshoe bay, Saye – on the northeast coast of the island – is one of the most attractive spots. Walk through a camellia and over sand dunes to access the area where grey seals frolic in the surf.

What to do: Measuring the island is easy to estimate. Like through nature reserves, take a boat trip to see puffin colonies on neighbouring Barhou, or ride the Channel Islands' only railway to the Marne Lighthouse. Visit between August 7-12 to see circus performers and parades at the annual Alderney Week carnival.

Where to stay: The Blonde Hedgehog (blondehedgehog.com) is a collection of 18th-century buildings transformed into a boutique Georgian retreat. From £160 per night with breakfast. Book via R&P Travel

Visit meudon.co.uk

Bream Cove, Cornwall

Best for: Families

Why: The West Country has stacks of sensational swimming and sun-bathing spots – but finding an empty space to throw your towel down becomes a challenge during busy summer months. Accessed via a short woodland walk near Mawgan Smith village, this southeast-facing, secluded sand and shingle cove is a refreshing relief from the busy full-mouth town beaches. The calm waters are great for snorkelling, while it's also one of the few places in the area dogs are allowed in the summer.

What to do: Hire a paddleboard from Little Wolf Adventures (25.5-hour private tours from £60 per adult and £30 per child under 14, including a picnic stop; littlewolfadventures.com). Afterwards, head for a coffee at the Bream Bee (honey box) cafe at the end of Hotel Meudon) or walk along the South West Coast Path towards Rosemullion Head and the Helford River, an important area of marine conservation.

Where to stay: Set in sprawling subtropical gardens, Hotel Meudon has a terrace for enjoying afternoon tea or sunset cocktails. Rooms from £129 per night (two sharing), including breakfast.

Pick a family holiday where your children can stay for free

If you're looking to cut travel costs, there are still great deals to be had this summer. Becky Lucas selects the best

Until you become a parent or guardian, it is unlikely you can understand the full power of those three little magic words: "Kids go free". For travellers with small dependants, those words contain a whisper of freedom, an instant loosening of tensions as suddenly the holiday budget can spread a great deal further.

Organising a kids-go-free offer is, perhaps, the number-one way to cut down family travel costs, making it possible to claw back some of the spending incurred later down the line, both upfront and long distance.

Families are far less likely to have the flexibility needed to bag any of the real bargains, spur-of-the-moment deals. While many airlines do not charge passengers under the age of two, costs can still quickly add up, particularly when families have no choice but to travel during peak school holiday dates. But even if you do manage to get away out of season, once you have established your children's routines and the little-doesn't impact on your own, suddenly the thought of taking a cheaper, indirect or night-time flight is less appealing. You may even have to pay to have your additional baggage in the hold, thanks to all the parental paraphernalia. Clearly, savings count.

In the majority of cases, "kids go free" equates to "kids can stay in your room for no extra charge, until a set of the time, with no extra bedding". It might be easy, but it can save you plenty of extra hassle, let alone the cost of booking another room. If that is out of the question, then the next best way to grab a deal is to take a look at what is included in an offer, and figure out how much value for money you are getting. Some packages offer free children's clubs, others complimentary in-room gifts and activities – a nice touch, indeed, but when some resorts throw in free dining and even entry passes to theme parks and attractions, the savings can be huge.

So, we have picked a sprinkling of some of the ultimate kids-go-free deals still available out there (at the time of publication for summer 2023, across the UK and beyond).

Capital gains in London

As well as offering an extremely central location on the South Bank, Park Plaza Riverbank (020 7331 6000; parkplazariverbank.com) has rooms from £243 per night, B&B.

Channel-hopping in Guernsey

Climb into the Duke of Richmond Hotel, a smart Georgian retreat in the pretty seaside town of St Peter Port with dreamy views and award-winning local seafood. Throughout the year, children under 12 are invited to stay for free in a room with their parents (a cot bed will be provided) – a day, lettrolley or sofa bed depending on the room category booked, as well as out of charge when ordering from the children's menu. (Duke of Richmond Hotel 01481 726 221; dukeofrichmond.com) has rooms from

£234 per night, B&B

A right royal stay

There are few more sophisticated stays for your little ones than retooling the Royal Mews of Buckingham Palace. Kids aged 12 or under can stay and eat for free when sharing a room with an adult and ordering from the children's menu at one of the hotel's restaurants, and they will also receive a welcome pack with colouring or sticker books and pencils. Don't miss the chance to join the Pearly Coat Experience, during which children can wear full chef's whites, wear the hotel's livery, learn how to decorate their own cupcakes, and, finally, receive a "mystery chef in the art of pastry" certificate. The Mews at The Palace 020 7738 6000; mewsatthepalace.com has rooms from £141 per night, B&B

Glamp it up in Wales

Far apace to Cwch Camping and its three stylish timber cabins, situated in private woodland outside Penarth, close to the Pembrokeshire Coast Park. Additional camp beds for up to three children are provided free of charge, along with children's books, games and toys, plus a cool box filled with local artisan products. The three cabins, which can only be booked as a family group, have a rainforest shower – with hot running water – large camp kitchen and fire pit. Ideal for embracing a little wilderness, with a guaranteed warm, soft bed. Cwch Camping 01493 666666; cwch.co.uk has rooms from £235 per night, B&B. Minimum two-night stay

BEST PLACES TO PITCH YOUR TENT AND HAVE GREAT SEA VIEWS

YOU'LL get spectacular coast and ocean views at Park Holidays' Waterside Park near Parginton in the heart of Devon's English Riviera. Just a stroll from some of the area's most popular Blue Flag beaches, the park has recently undergone a huge refurbishment with a new indoor pool with fun water features as well as a refresh of the park's bar and restaurant including a new terrace to take in those views. Prices start from £189 for four nights' self-catering in a two-bed silver grade caravan sleeping up to six. For more information see parkholidays.com or call 0343 178 7070.

WITH sweeping views of the Dorset coastline, Shorefield Holidays' Swanage Park sits atop the Purbeck Hills overlooking the Jurassic coastline. The park has a range of accommodation from caravans to lodges, some of which have hot tubs. There's easy access to Swanage Bay and the chance to explore both Dorset and East Devon. The park has a play park, shop and laundrette as well as free wifi.

A four-night break in a three-bed Statement caravan sleeping six is from £488 in total, arriving on July 17. See shorefield.co.uk.

GO off grid with a quirky Scottish glamping stay at Down On The Farm. There's cosy wooden glamping pods and even a vintage rail carriage with stunning views overlooking the lesser-known Aberdeenshire coastline. You can meet animals on the farm and may even spot a dolphin or two in the Moray Firth. It's also home to an award-winning loo with a view – transformed availability for this summer with pitches from just £18 per night. See thorningfarmglamping.co.uk.

SOAK up the Atlantic ocean sea views in Guernsey at the Camp de Reves glampsite on the island's west coast. Choose from luxury shepherd huts or family tents, all with countryside and sea views. Sleeping up to six, the family tents come with kitchen, lounge, dining area and four-poster bed plus bunk room and king-size cabin bed and bathroom. Each has its own private garden area

Missed the Arctic Monkeys? Enjoy the Arctic Donkeys at this year's SarkFest

Missed out on the Arctic Monkeys? Fear not, as SarkFest is back for a weekend of folk, rock, ska, reggae, blues and acoustic bands on 7 to 9 July 2023. Featuring more than 30 bands and artists from Guernsey, Jersey and the UK, SarkFest offers multiple stages for live music, children's entertainers, craft stalls, food tents, a main bar and an even bigger Pimms & Wine bar.

Arctic Monkeys (book band), Arctic Donkeys will be performing on the Grand Main Stage on the Friday of the festival and promise to bring all the best of the band's most popular songs to the local island of Sark.

Based on Sark, between Guernsey and Jersey, Sark is the crown jewel of the Channel Islands, offering a peaceful haven, unspoiled beach, coastal views.

By Juliana Kozlovskaya July 16, 2023 at 10:40 AM

Buy a real French painting! In Guernsey, an association did it to give back its cultural heritage to the Channel Islands and highlight the passage of the painter in their country, 140 years ago, an exhibition is taking place this summer, in Guernsey, and all autumn, in Jersey.

"Rue de Guernsey with Signet" was painted in 1883, on the Square of St. Martin, by the Master of Impressionist Auguste Renoir. It is the painting that the artist's Guernsey association was able to buy. (Photography: Renoir & son in Guernsey)

100,000 pounds, or about 120,000 euros. This is the amount paid by the association "Art for Guernsey" to acquire "Rue de Guernsey" with characters, one of the 14 canvases painted by Auguste Renoir during his visit to the Channel Islands at the end of the 19th century.

Renoir in Guernsey

A new exhibition celebrates the Impressionist's brief love affair with the Channel Island

Pierre-Auguste Renoir arrives in Guernsey, which inspired some of his most iconic works.

5 WEEKS

A short stay on the island transformed his artistic style forever.

15 PAINTINGS

Renoir painted 15 landscapes, including the bay of Moulin Huet.

6,292KM

Artworks for the exhibition are on loan from as far afield as the Cincinnati Art Museum, USA.

An art trail through the Moulin Huet Valley traces the real-life locations that inspired Renoir.

Guernsey photographer Paul Chambers has captured images of the island using camera technology from the 1880s (AFG Gallery, Old Quarter).

RENOIR'S GUERNSEY

The impressionist's time on the island proved a turning point in his work.
As an exhibition opens in its capital, Sarah Gillespie follows his brushstrokes

I've always felt that the sea was made for impressionists, and impressionists for the sea. Light brushes the waves with skittering strokes, the colours forever shifting. Claude Monet, Edouard Manet and Berthe Morisot dedicated much of their careers to capturing its caprices. And it was the sea – or, more specifically, the Channel – that was there for Pierre-Auguste Renoir when he needed it.

It was 1883 and Renoir – then 42, having made his name in portraiture and Parisian society scenes – was having an identity crisis. "I had wrung impressionism dry and had come to the conclusion that I knew neither how to paint nor how to draw," he wrote to his art dealer, Ambroise Vollard.

Then, in September of that year, Renoir spent five weeks on Guernsey, and the 15 works that he created on the Channel Island – most of them depictions of Moulin Huet Bay – would for ever alter the course of his career.

An exhibition that opened yesterday at the Candie Museum on Guernsey is showing ten of those pieces (until December 17; £10, artforguernsey.com). The bailiwick has an emerging food scene and its beaches and Second World War history have long drawn visitors, but I'm here for a couple of days' immersion in Renoir's Guernsey, starting with a preview of the exhibition.

On the day of my visit the front-page story in The Guernsey Press and Star is a suspected case of mistaken identity: new research suggests that the Renoir painting Baie de Salerne may portray a place in Guernsey rather than in Italy. And they're not as different as you might think – as my plane descends over the island I'm surrounded by Bermuda shorts and pasty legs ready for temperatures in the 20s, out of the window I can see a seagull-white cruise ship in an ultramarine sea.

An hour later at the Candie Museum in St Peter Port, the capital, David Ummels is holding up his phone in front of the painting, displaying a photo of the coast between reasonably priced; the (French) gamay wine has a bouquet of leather and oak (mains from £19; red, £6).

The next morning, from my room at the Old Government House Hotel, I see a hole opening in the sky and a shaft of sunlight bursts through this perfect circle in the clouds, showering St Peter Port in golden rays. It's there for seconds then closes, and I'm beginning to think that Guernsey follows laws tethered to art rather than physics.

The local tour guide Gill Girard meets me at the hotel reception. As we drive to Moulin Huet Bay I see that the skies have clouded over and I feel a pang of disappointment, knowing that I won't see it as Renoir did. But the moment we park above the bay my suspicion that this place is a law unto itself is confirmed – the sun has broken through again, bathing it in light. The sea, a sort of intense green-blue, appears to glow from within; close up, the waves are slick like oil paint, their edges etched in silver. Vermilion

Renoir's residence in town and Moulin Huet Bay, while looking at me with an expression that says, "I told you so." And I can see his point – the outline is identical. Ummels founded the Art for Guernsey charity seven years ago. Along with Cyrille Sciana – director of the Musée des Impressionnistes in Giverny, northern France – he has been instrumental in bringing all but two of the paintings here for the Renoir exhibition (Parcours de Bretagne, Guernsey is usually in the permanent exhibition at the Candie).

Rochers de Guernsey avec personnages has been in the Art for Guernsey gallery since 2020. The other seven are on loan from museums as far afield as Giverny. Almost all are landscapes. "Renoir wanted to move into landscapes because he felt he would find more freedom," Ummels says. "Portraiture is magnificent too, but at some point any artist spending ten years on a topic will feel they're done. I think it was the beginning of something that lasted the next three decades."

He shows me Brouillard à Guernsey (fog on Guernsey), featuring a mason hall stippled against a pink sky. "Light is a currency in Guernsey," he says. "Islanders talk about sunset, sunrise, high tide, low tide, five o'clock on my way back from work – everybody has a view. There is something so special about the light, every single artist we bring here understands why."

Many of the works were painted in situ. In La Baie de Moulin Huet, Guernsey Renoir added figures to the seascape while the paint was still wet, smearing pink flesh into blue ocean. Resurgence au soir art an urchin (father seated on a rock is a more detailed study of a mude bather at Moulin Huet Bay. "That came as a shock to him, because it wasn't what he was expecting from Victorian puritanism, and certainly not what he was used to seeing on the other side of the sea," Ummels says. "It brought him back to antiquity, to the old masters, and he felt that he would paint the next two decades of his career were pretty much about mudes. It's great for us that he found a bit of inspiration from our landscape and peculiar habits."

Walking through St Peter Port I pass cobalt blue postboxes and a primary school called Notre Dame; a bus screeches past bound for Boleas Harbour, in the northeast of the island. Guernsey was part of the Duchy of Normandy until 1204 and is now a British Crown Dependency – neither fully French nor fully British. The end of the pier is the 13th-century Castle Cornet, built as a defence against French attacks.

At the Art for Guernsey gallery I catch an exhibition by the local photographer Paul Chambers. Ummels told me that Renoir refused to see photographers as real artists, so Chambers has tried to capture Moulin Huet Bay using the same analogue technology that would have been available in 1883 – the monochrome images blaze and blur, their edges weeping chemical black (until November 25; free). As the lights of the harbour (and St Peter Port) wink on, search for dinner. In a letter to Paul-André Bérard, his most important patron, Renoir praised Guernsey's "streak and oil at managehite Scan a QR code and a Sciana audio guide booms from your phone. We see the landscapes that Renoir saw, but also the liberties he took with them – a rock moved here; a house placed there.

We arrive at the newly refurbished Renoir Tea Garden for herbal tea and gâche, a Guernésiais cake with mixed peel and dried fruits. Brouillard à Guernsey was painted in this spot. I laugh at Girard, who despite her decades of guiding has taken dozens of photos and is taking more.

"Oh, hundreds," she says when I ask her how many she has of Moulin Huet Bay. "Though Renoir was here for only a short time he must have seen a huge variety in the light. It's never the same."

Guernsey getaway

Numerous Guernsey restaurants will be serving £10 meals during October (tennerfest.com) as a Renoir exhibition that runs until December 17 marks 140 years since the impressionist artist stayed on the Channel Island (£12; artforguernsey.com). Condor Ferries is also offering free nights at certain Guernsey hotels all month, including the half-term holidays. Among them is the Driftwood Inn, with bleached-wood bedrooms, bistro food and a terrace positioned for sunsets over Perelle Bay. The deal means you get five nights' B&B in a double for the price of four, from £638 including return foot-passenger ferry tickets for two from Portsmouth (condorferries.co.uk).

Painter's art brought home to island that inspired him

Steven Morris

The island of Guernsey may be best known as a tax haven for the super-wealthy. But thanks to a brief sojourn by Pierre-Auguste Renoir 140 years ago, and the bold thinking of culture lovers on the island, it is becoming a draw for art fans.

An exhibition of paintings created by Renoir while he was on Guernsey in September 1883, or inspired by his trip, opens this weekend at the island's small museum high above the harbour. Related shows have been launched featuring work created by primary school pupils in response to Renoir, and photographs of the landscapes he immortalised taken by an island photographer with 19th-century equipment.

But it goes further. The Renoir connection is proving a wider boost for the island, where by no means everyone is a tax-efficient millionaire, creating jobs, helping to revive the Old Quarter of the main town, St Peter Port.

"This is a real celebration," said Helen Glencross, the head of heritage services on Guernsey. "It will be impossible to avoid Renoir - in a positive way. It means a lot to an island of 65,000 people."

David Ummels, the founder of Art for Guernsey, the force behind the Renoir project, said: "When you live on an island, opportunities like this are limited." The exhibition, Renoir in Guernsey, 1883, has its beginnings in 2019 when Art for Guernsey launched a "Renoir walk" - a set of ornate frames set up in front of the views of Moulin Huet

Bay, where the artist painted.

In 2020, Art for Guernsey persuaded artists and collectors to unite to buy one of the Renoirs painted on the island, Rocks in Guernsey With Figures (Beach in Guernsey), and "bring it home". They succeeded. "If there had been a serious buyer in the room we probably wouldn't have," Ummels said. "We had our limit." Visitors flocked in their thousands. Its presence meant that when they asked some of the world's greatest galleries if they could borrow a painting for the current show, they were taken seriously. Artworks were sent over from the Musée d'Orsay in Paris, the Cincinnati Art Museum and the National Gallery.

The exhibition has the trappings of a big-city art show but in miniature. Set up in three modest rooms at the museum, the show of 10 Renoirs feels intimate, personal - and tells a brilliant story.

Ummels said Renoir was at an artistic "dead end" when he arrived on Guernsey and was charmed by the freedom with which swimmers would shed their clothes and plunge in - very different to the staid beaches of France and Britain. After his Guernsey visit, Renoir began focusing on painting nudes in landscapes, which helped him make his mark on the US. "He found a career-shaping inspiration here," Ummels said.

Renoir in Guernsey, 1883, is on show from today until 17 December

MORE GUERNSEY ART

PRIAULX LIBRARY

In 1889 the barrister Osmond de Beauvoir Priaulx donated his book-filled Georgian townhouse to the people of Guernsey; it contains 25,000 historical photographs and maps of the island, the earliest dating from 1588. Until December 16 the library is hosting an exhibition titled A Day in 1883, comprising engravings, photographs and documents portraying life on the island during the time of Renoir's visit. It's a few steps from the Candie Museum in St Peter Port (free; priaulxlibrary.co.uk).

several other masterpieces at the five-storey Hauteville House in St Peter Port, and visitors can admire his singular taste in floral wall coverings, left, patterned fabrics and painted porcelain. Access is by booked guided tours from May to September only (£12; maisons.victorhugo.paris.fr).

TURNER TRAIL

The English Romanticist JMW Turner visited Guernsey in 1829 and sketched St Peter Port, Cornet Castle, Moulin Huet Bay and beauty spots along the east coast. The sketchbook, which has more than 120 images, is held at Tate Britain (viewable by appointment). Fresh from his Renoir successes David Ummels's next Art for Guernsey project is the Turner Trail, in a similar format to the Renoir walk (see main article) and launching this coming spring (artforguernsey.com).

HAUTEVILLE HOUSE

Before his visit in 1883 Renoir wrote to his friend Edmond Maître that he wanted to see "the rock upon which the great poet lamented", in reference to Victor Hugo, the French writer who spent 15 years in exile on Guernsey. Hugo wrote Les Misérables and

RENOIR REVISITED

With soft brushstrokes and glowing colours, Pierre-Auguste Renoir perfectly conjures up the hazy beauty of a summer's day on the Guernsey coast. To mark 140 years since he visited the island, a selection of pictures he painted there are brought together in a new exhibition, Renoir in Guernsey, 1883, at the Guernsey Museum at Candie.

Stuck of mist too, and wandered down through the Ferman Valley just past bromeliads and camellias to Ferman Bay. Despite the equally weather, we took a bracing dip and ate phase two of our afternoon tea on the beach to a light drizzle. The weather was reliably changeable, but it didn't dampen our spirits as we packed up and followed one of Visit Guernsey's many self-guided walking routes along the rocky coastline.

On our first trip we visited the beautiful island of Herm, this time we opted for 45-minute ferry ride to Sark, dolphins leaping alongside us as we neared the small dock next to impressive cliffs. Before climbing the steep Harbour Hill to the village, we joined Outdoor Guernsey for a hiking experience out of Cross Harbour navigating gullies and venturing into sea caves. Car-free Sark is home to just a few hundred souls, but you can catch the 'boat rack' tractor up and down Harbour Hill for a small charge and rent bikes from A to B Cycles at the top, but beware of cycling back down the hill. If the local coastline catches you, there's a 2300 ft. The time flies when you're having fun.

Time Travel

A decade after their first visit, Jane Anderson and her teenage daughter return to Guernsey and Sark for a week of wellness, wild swims and new memories

QUIRY LOCAL

The last time I visited Guernsey with my daughter Scarlett, she was nine years old, enjoyed dressing up in medieval costume at the 800-year-old Castle Cornet in St Peter's Port and leaping off rocks in Cobo Bay. Ten years on, we returned to see if this little island, just 30 miles off the coast of Normandy, was more British than afternoon tea, could be as magical an experience for a mum and her 19-year-old daughter.

One aspect that's shifted in the last decade is our climate awareness, and instead of taking the short flight to the second largest of the seven inhabited Channel Islands, we saved our carbon miles and opted for the train from London, and Condor Ferry from Poole to St Peter's Port. It's definitely worth booking the fast ferries and the lounge passes for maximum comfort. No two know you're getting close when you sail past the island of Alderney and soon after reach Guernsey's pretty harbours with a clear view of Castle Cornet's battlements, sparking childhood memories for Scarlett.

Picking up our hire car from the airport (there's no hire at the ferry), it was a joy to bottle along the country lanes with the radio on. The maximum speed here is 35 miles per hour and nothing is more than around a 20-minute drive away. We soon found Ferman Valley Hotel, perched seductively at the top of a wooded valley running down to the sea. The hotel tumbles over different levels, and is home to four new treehouse cabins where your private decked terrace is literally in the treetops with tantalising glimpses of the sea. We booked into House number 4, with its wood-clad interiors, industrial lighting and old-fashioned telephone and radio, plus lovely yoga mats should you want to downward dog on the terrace. We opted instead for a warm soak in our private outdoor jacuzzi listening to birds in the trees. Easy.

On our mother and daughter trip, wellness was a priority. Scarlett taking a break from her university work and partying. We both adore outdoor swimming and made a baseline for the Vive la Volette Bathing Pools on the edge of St Peter's Port. These four idyllic bathing pools, which are free to use, have undergone many renovations since their creation in 1865. We loved their location, the sea crashing over the walls, and the views of sister islands Herm and Sark. The designer changing rooms with hot showers made the experience a joy, as did the modern café overlooking the pools with good coffee, sandwiches and cakes and a wood-burning stove to cosy up after a cold dip. For something fancier such as local oysters, head to Octopus just along the road into town.

Postcards, we took the opportunity to stroll around St Peter's Port walking out its second-hand shops and antique stores. We hit gold at the Health Connections Charity Shop on Smith Street which felt like a curated vintage store. I came away with a gorgeous black velvet dress (which in my mind could pass as The Yampi's Wild) and Scarlett chose a lovely skirt and blouse.

As Scarlett is studying fine art at university and is a big fan of craft, we headed to the Guernsey Tapistry Gallery which displays the traditions of Guernsey Millennium Tapistry, illustrating a thousand years of local history.

Next up was a wander around Neustelle House where French writer and politician, Victor Hugo, spent during his exile here in 1856. Like a work of art itself with clashing textures on every wall, ceiling and floor, it was thrilling to learn he wrote Les Misérables in this very spot.

Back at the Ferman Valley Hotel, we indulged in a lavish afternoon tea, stands piled high with delicious sandwiches, cakes and scones. We devoured half, and packed up the snack sandwiches and chocolate bunnies with a →
